

Trevor Douglas is a quirky, 17-year-old singer-songwriter from Fort Worth, Texas whom I had the pleasure of meeting not too long ago. After spending a little while with him, I saw that he was just a normal kid, "Home is nice. And my friends. That's cool. Also my room. I can relax in my room." But if you asked Trevor to describe himself, he'd tell you, "I am not smooth or cool," as he told me. Although, if you asked one of his around 50,000 fans, they would disagree.

Trevor grew up with artistic siblings and the most supportive mom, "My mom never got as much art training when she was a kid, so, she made sure that like all of her kids did. So it was kind of, I wouldn't say her fault, but, uh, she helped us out." Being raised in an environment with so much love from the people around him, he quickly adjusted to performing, "It was just kind of normal to me. Like, 'Oh! My brother and sister do it, I guess I'll do it, too!' So, I never really had that problem of, like, being too nervous onstage or stuff. 'Cause I just thought, you know, that's what you're supposed to do when you're onstage." Since he was raised with arts all around him, "I also did a lot of other arts. I danced and I acted and I tried visual arts. The only ones that really stayed were acting and music... Mostly music," he somehow always knew he would be making music, "You know, there's a lot of people trying to do music. There's a lot of people, so it's hard to stand out. But, um, I mean, you just kind of roll with it. I think I become more confident, the more and more I do. But it was always what I wanted to do. It was always what I wanted to do. But, uh, I guess I'd say, I haven't really had any doubts."
